Working with LGBTQ Youth

Working with youth is always a challenge, maybe a rewarding challenge, maybe not; especially if the youth is one of the many LGBTQ (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and questioning) in the child welfare system. Young people know when the adults in their lives are uncomfortable with them, so it is important to explore your attitudes about race, gender, sexual orientation or gender identification and to consider whether these attitudes will effect your ability to work with these youth.

There is a very good article by Mimi Laver entitled “Exploring Attitudes about LGBTQ Youth in Foster Care” in ABA’s “Child Law Practice,” September 2007, on page 97. In this article you will find:

- Ground rules for talking to LGBTQ youth
- An informative “Riddle Homophobic Scale: Lesbian/Bisexual Identity”
- An attitude checklist
- The “GLBT Personal Comfort Assessment Tool”
- A list of resources for further exploration

If you work with youth please let us FAX you a copy of this 7-page important article!
